in october, our school organized a science fair called future innovators 2025 where students from different schools participated, including a sponsor named green energy solutions ltd. my project on solar energy was presented to dr ahmed khan, a professor from quaid i azam university, and he asked, "how does your model help reduce pollution?" i explained my idea and mentioned cities like karachi and lahore, but he suggested that i should also include data from islamabad to make my research stronger. later, my uncle and dad said that my project deserved first place, not second place ii.

during the winter holidays, i read books like harry potter and the goblet of fire by j k rowling and around the world in eighty days by jules verne. my english teacher, mrs shah, always says, "reading opens the doors to knowledge," so i started writing a story titled the mystery of the hidden valley set in gilgit baltistan. in my story, the main character travels across hunza and skardu and discovers secrets about ancient cultures and traditions, and my dad told me that chapter iv was the most interesting part.
