■ The Garden Challenge

Look carefully at the picture. Who is helping in the garden? What are they doing?

On Saturday morning, Sara and her brother Hamza woke up early because they were going to help their grandmother in the garden. They were excited because it was the first sunny day after a week of rain. Grandma smiled and said, "Practice makes a man perfect, so keep trying even if a job seems difficult."

First, the children cleaned the flower beds. Hamza wanted to give up, but Sara encouraged him to sit down for a short rest. After they worked for an hour, Grandma gave them some lemonade. "You have done a great job, and now watering the plants will be a piece of cake," she said.

The garden looked beautiful because colourful flowers were opening in the warm sunshine. The red roses were as bright as little stars, while the tall sunflowers were golden giants reaching towards the sky. Sara carefully watered the plants, but Hamza accidentally spilled some water on his shoes. They laughed because his shoes looked like two tiny swimming pools.

Later, Grandma told them that honesty is the best policy. She explained that if they made a mistake, they should always tell the truth. Hamza admitted that he had stepped on one small plant by accident, so Grandma showed him how to protect it.

Before leaving, the children promised to help again. They knew that they could visit only once in a blue moon because they lived far away, but they would always try to help when they could. Finally, they packed their things and sat down together. It had been a busy day, yet they felt proud because they had learned that patience, honesty, and practice can make difficult tasks easier.
